I've just found two pictures suitable for our project "Places of living". Let me tell you a bit more about them. 1) They are relevant to our project because in both pictures we can see families and their homes. In the first photo there's a family of four in front of their country house. They are sitting on the grass and seem to be happy. In the second photo there's a family of three in their flat. They are unpacking their stuff. 2) As you can see, there are some differences to illustrate our project better. In the first photo there's a family who have been living in the country for a while whereas in the second one (photo) the family have just moved to their new flat. What is more, in photo 1 there're two children, so they need more space while photo 2 illustrates a young family with one child and they probably can't afford to buy a house. 3) In my opinion, both places of living have their advantages and disadvantages. For example, a house in the countryside is more spacious and there's better environment, however it might be expensive to maintain it. As for a flat, it is cheaper or a young family to buy or rent but it might be cramped if parents have more children. 4) Personally, I wouldn't like to live in a country house because I enjoy hustle and bustle of a big city. I'm used to all facilities of a big city and can't do without them. Well, that's all for now. Looking forward to your reaction. Bye.
